STORY OF THE SO-CALLED MUTINEERS.

EDITOR BULLETIN:—We having read your article published the other day in reference to the so-called mutiny, and feeling not only grateful to you for its tone, but also thinking that you might for humanity's sake, be willing to give publicity to our story, if prepared for you, and feeling that that story if published might tend to a proper examination of our case, we have prepared the following brief statement. By publishing the same you will earn our united gratitude. This is the only course left open to us, otherwise, we would never have attempted to trouble you. Premising, we would say that we have been before the U. S. Consul, and after making a hasty and imperfect statement, owing to his apparent indifference to our story, we were lodged in the Station House and are there still. The Portuguese Commissioner has here visited such of us as are Portuguese (about four of our number). There are others here of four different nationalities, namely: Americans, British, Germans and Dutch, who have had no means of communicating with their respective consuls or commissioners. Our treatment by the authorities has been most kind and courteous, and in singular contrast with our treatment on our own voyage hither.

We are called mutineers. But if the facts of the case, fairly stated, make us so, then we suppose the same reasoning will make our captain a saint and our ship a paradise. Here it is:—

We left New Bedford July 20, 1887, for a 15 months' whaling cruise to the Arctic, and arrived here March 13th. We had not been out 20 days, when the offensive and impure character of the food supplied to us made it necessary to complain to the captain. We made no demand or threats; and one of us was knocked down in a brutal manner, while asking to see the ship's articles; and we were also threatened with future ill-treatment for the offense we had committed. This threat has proved to be no idle one, for off Cape Horn, the vessel, as we believe, was purposely delayed, the vessel with quite ordinary weather taking two months to round the Cape, and going far enough South (as the Captain himself said) to see ice. The course was not altered until the mate emphatically declared it must be changed, for neither he nor the men could stand the cold. Moreover, the men were deprived of a stove, put on board especially for use by them. Certain of us were refused the privilege of buying extra clothing from the slop-chest.

The captain was almost incessantly warning his own interior with grog, supposed to have been put aboard for the use of the men, while they had neither grog, fire, nor sufficient clothing to keep them warm. The effect of his drinking what was supposed to have been aboard for the use of 30 men can be imagined. He was almost always in a state unfit to command a vessel, and as a consequence, one poor fellow lost his life overboard. This was by a senseless command, to fort and unfurl a sail two or three times over in a gale of wind.

Our only meat was salt-junk during the whole voyage with the exception of three or four meals of fresh meat off the South American Coast. After one month, our potatoes gave out. Besides this, we had bread made of horrible flour, filled with debris of various kinds. It was simply like the salt junk, uneatable. The meat was old and stinking, probably had been on several previous voyages. We had dried beans once every seven days until about six weeks before arrival. Had no other vegetables of any kind.

We had scurvy in November and 5 bad cases until arrival. When scurvy had broken out the captain would allow the sick a little lime juice and vinegar, but at no other time. One man is still sick on board with the disease.

One man among us is sick. This man injured his back by a fall down the hold, and has ailed ever since more or less, is now suffering pain and sore throat, is not allowed proper treatment, and is compelled to sleep on hard boards without a pillow in his cell. Among the whole twenty of us we have three thin blankets, but we do not blame the authorities here for that as we know the Station House is not a place for permanent detention. We, who are well, do not care for board beds and the bites of millions of mosquitoes; for it is altogether heavenly in comparison to life aboard that ship.

Still further, the captain has threatened to punish us for our mutinous conduct when he gets us "up north." We suppose he intends to freeze us in a more severe fashion than he did off Cape Horn. Our lives even are not safe; and we feel it, with a man who makes himself incompetent by reason of his intemperate habits.

This statement, we doubt not, will be corroborated in almost every particular by every man on board, even down to the first mate. Individual instances of brutality we have not related, but they are numerous.

When we shipped it was distinctly understood, we were to have liberty on arriving at Honolulu. We simply requested, as we had been nearly 8 months at sea. We know by experience that the captain intends not to give us any until we have finished our voyage. Until now, none of us have ever disobeyed a command. When we started on our voyage there was not an able seaman aboard; there are none now. Whether, under the circumstances we can ever get any redress, is the question we ask. Some wise people say "every wrong has its remedy." There is either no wrong here or the remedy is missing. The lawyers say they can fix us right, but the need of tin, which we have not, is ominously suggested.

A FRIENDLY ARGUMENT.

EDITOR BULLETIN:—Allow me to premise by saying that I am writing in the spirit of friendly argument. The subject on which I take issue with you is, "Should a public servant have a private business?" I argue, no, and present the following as my reasons:

This Government being the Reform Government is intended to be by and for the people—all the people, not some—and the well being of all is supposed to be in view in every step they take. Now, one important point is to so conduct affairs that the people may be contented and happy; but if, according to your theory, one man is allowed to fill an official position and to carry on business at the same time, somebody is going to be crowded out, and dissatisfaction that might be prevented is going to ensue, and possibly a loss of population, which means taxes and votes.

In the second place it is only fair to judge that there are men capable of filling the various Government offices outside the ranks of men in business, and if the business man considers the Government position precarious, why take it? why not confine his attention to his business and leave the Government position to some one who does not want the whole earth but is content with part of it.

I have no objection to any one getting an anchor out to windward as it were, but I do object to the Government assisting him to do it, probably at the expense of some one else in the community with equal rights as far as the Government is concerned. No, my dear Editor, I don't believe in it; in business every man has got the right to crowd another out, if he can and desires to do so, but when he has the assistance of the Government to fill two holes with one peg somebody is treated unjustly.

You must not imagine that I argue that a man has no right to perform any labor outside of Government hours. I do not for a minute argue any such thing; labor is sacred, and any man has a right to work as long as he is at liberty to do so, and to receive pay for it if he can find anyone to employ him, but I do contend that the holding of a Government position carries more or less influence with it, and places the holder in a position commercially to further his own interests at the expense of some business competitor who at the same time partially bears the burden of the salary paid to said Government official.

Now allowing as you argue that a Government position is precarious, the remedy, in my mind, lies not in filling said positions with men who can afford to lose them again without injury to themselves, but rather to pass such laws as will secure a good civil service system to this country, a system demanding an applicant prove competency before appointment, and after appointment protection from removal except from cause, said cause to be sufficient for removal, and to be proven by trial should the official demand it.

As the Legislature will soon meet, I think this important matter should be ventilated, and I feel that in calling your attention to it I have done all that is necessary to further that object, leaving the matter thus in your hands, and hoping I have succeeded in converting you to my view. I am,

Yours respectfully,
F. M.

Philadelphia, March 5.—Claus Spreckels and his son held prolonged conference to-day with E. C. Knight in the latter's office. There were also present Knight's son and Francis R. Pemberton, President of the Pennsylvania Warehousing Company. At the conclusion of the conference the elder Spreckels said that he should not talk conclusively about his intentions until he had gone fully over the ground and inquired fully into the desirability of both. Pemberton wishes to interest him in a project for the establishment of an extensive refinery in this city, which has been under consideration for several months past.
